AYER'S

Sarsaparilla, wherever used, is always spoken of in terms of highest praise. WILLIAM SMALL, Fort Fairfield, Me., says, in a letter recently received: 4'It gives me pleasure to speak from personal knowledge of the wonderful cure, by the use of AYER'S Sarsapartils, of a bad humor in a child eleven years old. The child's hands, arms, feet and less were covered with blotches and scabs, resisting all local applica tions. Very soon after taking AYER'S Sarsaparille the humor disappeared, the cure being complete. A ablood purifier I consider that AYER'S

BARSAPARILLA

Stands at the head of the whole catalogue of such preparations, especially when used in connection rith AYER'S Pills."

"There can be no question as to the superiority AYER'S Sarsaparilla over all other bloed purifiers. If this was not the case the demand for it, stead of inreasing yearly, would have ceased long ago, like so many other blood medicines I could name."-F. L. NICKERSON, Charlestown, Mass.

NO MORE ASHES THERE.

The Lady Has Become a Member of the Bon Ton and Couldn't Be Bothered.

The colored driver of an ash wagon stopped his horse in front of a humble cabin on Grove street the other forenoon and called out and motioned to a woman who could be seen through one of the front windows. She took her time about appearing, but the front door and inquired:

"Was yo' callin' to me, sah?" "Was I callin' to yo'? Of co'se I was callin' to yo'! Hev yo' dun got any wood "What I doin' wid wood ashes around

'What yo' doin'? Why, bress my "What yo' doin'? Why, bress my soul, but yo' am gittin' mighty peart, Missus Slokum! I'ze bin callin' yere fur ober three y'ars to git wood ashes, an' yo' has bin powerful quick to sell 'em!" "Does folks what hev a $16 base-burner coal stove tinker around wid wood ashes?"

she severely demanded.
"Shoo! Got a base-burner, eh?" "Does folks what hev got a doah bell on de front doah hev to be hollered at frew de winder?" she continued. "Shoo! Got a shuah-'nuff doah bell, eh? I than't see it, Missus Slokum!" "Does folks what hev got a cuckoo clock, a Persian rug an' a new clothes-wringer want to sell 6 cents' worf of wood ashes an' hev de dust flyin' all ober de house?" "Fur de Lawd's sake!"

"Does a widder woman," she continued,

"a widder woman who dun got her hus-band's life insurance only two weeks ago, want all de nayburs to see her standin' in de front doah talkin' wid dat ash-man like she'd got ober her broken-heartedness an' was tryin' to ketch anodder husband? No, was tryin to ketch anoder install saht Ash-man, yo' dun go on to de next house! Dar won't be no wood ashes around yere dis hull winter long!"

DON'T KNOW HOW TO EAT.

Too Many Americans Woefully Deficient in That Branch of Education. "When my children get to the proper age," said the man who was smoking a briar pipe, "I intend to have them taken in hand by some competent person and give them a thorough instruction in the art of eating and, further, in the science of finding out what to eat and ordering." "What do you mean?" inquired a Buffalo

Express man who sat next to him. "I mean this: The average American citizen is woefully deficient in knowledge of what he can get to eat. He falls down when it comes to ordering a dinner. The great majority of people in this country great majority of people in this country are brought up frugally at home and do not know anything but the commonest dishes. The consequence is that when a man goes into a restaurant for dinner or to a hotel he gazes helplessly at the bill of fare and sees many things of which he does not know the component parts. He dares not order anything that he is not sure of for fear of ridicule, and he falls back on roast beef and mashed potatoes. The fact is, he doesn't know anything but roast beef. doesn't know anything but roast beef. Same way in a restaurant. When a waiter shoves a bill of fare under a man's nose under times out of ten he will look it over and then say: 'Gimme a steak and some fried potatoes.' Now, the man who does this day after day doesn't want roast beef. He is sick unto death of steaks and fried potatoes. He loathes ham and eggs, and yet he keeps on ordering them in dreary and dyspeptic succession, because he doesn't know any better and he is too proud to confess his ignorance. It's that way with me, and I'll bet it's that way with most of you I am going to relieve my children of all these things. They're going to know what's what when it comes to eating. 'No roast beef domination!' shall be my house

South Sea Pirates on Trial. From the London Telegraph. A writer of thrilling stories of adventure for boys would find a plot ready to his hand in the charges brought against two Frenchmen name Rorique, brothers, who are at present awaiting their trial at Brest. According to the case for the prosecution, these men are latter day pirates of a particularly faring description. On December 15, 1891, the French schooner Ninroahiti, trading with Tahiti, left that place under the command of a native skipper named Tehac a Tara. The first mate was Joseph Rorique, one of the accused, and the crew consisted of an Englishman named William Gibson, who was supercargo, four natives, and a half-caste, who acted as cook. The vessel carried 40,000 francs' worth of goods to be exchanged in some South Sea islands for mother-of-pearl and other products. At one of these out-of-the-way ports Joseph Rorique's brother, Alexander, came on board, and the two then planned the mutiny. The captain and the Englishman were shot, and the crew, all but the cook, were killed by means of poisoned food; whereupon the brothers took command of the vessel, painted out the name, substituting that of "Le Roi," and making a descent on a little island, forced some of the inhabitants to come and man the ship. Possibly they might have remained undiscovered, but for the fact that some time afterward they reatened to kill the half-caste, who t upon went and gave information to the authorities of one of the Caroline Islands.

JESSE'S BAD BOY.

He Outrode the Cyclone on a Plank. From the New York Tribune

Jesse's boy was bad. When he was s little fellow who could just toddle he was bad. Mischief shone in his eyes, lurked in his broad nose, and grinned openly from his mouth. At three years he would come to the store for biscuit, show his penny, but when he got the biscuit, off went biscuit, penny and boy, and fleet must be the foot to catch him. At a safe distnace he would stand derisively waving biscuit and penny with a "Don' yo' wish yo' had um?" When five years old he caught his father's unbroken colt and scrambled on his back. The colt galloped madly down the road, but the boy stuck on, and soon rode proudly back, the colt comquered. Many a stolen ride he had after that.

It became his greatest pleasure to exhibit his skill, racing up and down before the store. Meet him in the road it was: "Gie me a ride, Mr. Mac?" When he tired of hanging on behind he ran races with the horse, but to his chagrin, fleet as he was, the horse could beat him.

At eight, his badness had increased with his years, and on the day of August 27 he stole a chicken, and was discovered. Now, Jesse was a big, powerful man, and his blows were hard to stand up unier, so, to save the beating he knew was in store, Jesses's boy ran off to an aunt, who lived some miles away on Eustis plantation. All that day it stormed, and when night came the tide rose so high that the house was surrounded by water, and still on it and penny with a "Don' yo' wish yo' had Jesse's boy got astride a plank. He saw his aunt sink in the water. Amid wind and rain, he floated out, an atom on the angry waters.

At daybreak, miles away, two men searching for dead bodies heard a shrill little voice say: "Ge up, old plank!" and, riding the water as fearlessly as though on his beloved colt's back, came Jesse's boy. Just the boy. Wind and rain had stripped every vestige of clothes from his back, lashed and beaten him, but with his bare body brimful of courage yet, after a pight.

"Are you speaking to me, sir?" asked the man on his right.

"I'm speakin' to the hull crowd o' you," said the old man, as he rose up and looked around. Diamonds Found in Wisconsin. From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A small sensation was caused here tonight sold on Saturday last. The sale aggregated by the announcement that a diamond of first quality had been discovered on a farm in the town of Oregon, Dane county, twelve miles south of this city. Last October Charles Devins' son, while playing in a bank of clay on the farm of Judson Devine, southwest of the village of Oregon,picked up a peculiarly shaped stone. which he took home. Mr. Devine laid the stone away because of its shape and semi-transparency. On Wednesday it was brought in to Dr. William H. Hobbs, pro-fessor of mineralogy and metallurgy in the

The bank of clay in which the diamond was found contained a large number of rounded pebbles, of which some were shown along with the diamond to Dr. Hobbs, but they were nothing but common mineral quartz. The diamond is a formel crystal, being a rhombic dodecahedron, with the and covered with small, irregular pits or etchings. It seems to be nearly colorless and shows no flaws. It has a diameter of about three-eighths of an inch, and its weight, as given by a jeweler to whom it was shown, is about one half a penny-weight, or four carats. weight, or four carats.

It would be difficult for any but an expert to estimate its value, as this depends on its purity or water, yet it is safe to say this specimen is worth nearly $260. This discovery recalls the sixteen-carat diamond found at Waukesha in 1884, which was likewise in the giacial drift, and which has become known through the high value—$1.000—placed upon it, and the litigation which it caused. Two other diamonds were alloyed to have been found at Waukesha women generally.

A few min-utes later I sent for him to come to my room, which was above the storeroom, and I could see the crowd below from my win-dow. When he came in he was awkward and suspicious, and I noticed him eyeing my plethoric saddle bags on the bed. I talked with him on the political prospect and then opened the saddle bags, took out the bottles, opened one, and invited him to help himself. He was neither awkward nor suspicious in doing this, and the drink he took was enough to flush a sewer. It had a fine effect, enough to flush a sewer. It had a line ellect, too, for his manner changed visibly, and when he went out he was in great good humor. As he joined the crowd below they gathered around him, all curious.

"'He ain't no dude,' I could hear him say.
